Cheese has become a popular product in urban households and the global food processing industry. Goat cheese has emerged as the most promising market worldwide in the last decade or so. Goat cheese is easy to digest and low in calories instead of bovine cheese, which is difficult to digest and high in cholesterol and fat. Goat cheese also contains more vitamins, particularly vitamins A, B1, B2, and B3, as well as calcium and phosphorus.

Chevre is the most common type of goat cheese, and it's created from goat's milk. The goat cheese is tangy and earthy in flavour. It's lower in fat and calories, and it's one of the quickest-to-market dairy products. Goat cheese, on the other hand, provides numerous health benefits, including better bone health, immunity, muscle and neuron function, blood pressure control, and more.

The growing preference for goat milk by lactose-intolerant people due to its lower lactose levels further fuels the market. The introduction of value-added products, such as flavored milk varieties with low-sugar and fat-free content, also propels market growth. Goat milk-based infant formulas are also gaining popularity due to their high nutritional content, which helps children avoid neurodevelopment disorders. Furthermore, rising demand for goat milk in the personal care sector for the production of soaps, creams, and lotions is catalysing the market. The COVID-19 pandemic in early 2020 has increased demand for goat milk. Because of its immunity-boosting properties, goat milk consumption has increased as a result of the pandemic.
