

TID Historical NFT Research Institute is the First NFT Studio Dedicated to Learning About History Through Digital Art

TID's Historical NFTs (hNFTs) Are Building Collaborations Between Universities, Museums and Contemporary Artists to Produce Educational Art on the Blockchain

BARCELONA, CATALONIA, SPAIN, May 31, 2022 /EINPresswire.com/ -- Barcelona, Spain, May 31: TID hNFT Research Institute announces the start of a groundbreaking NFT project that applies the highest standards of legacy publishing to the production of blockchain art. The institute is launching six collections for the 2022-23 season that will appeal to both online and offline collectors with a passion for art, history and culture.

Our debut collection, Hominins, is the first hNFT collection by world renowned evolutionary artist John Gurche.

Each collection produced by TID is curated by leading scholars to achieve the greatest possible interest and accuracy. For these experts, TID hNFTs are an exciting new communication tool; for artists, they are a new way to engage with history. For collectors, the added value of this collaboration makes TID hNFTs a unique collectible, not only as art but as the first representations of our common heritage on the blockchain—digital art about history that in itself is making history.

Our vision is to create value for museums as well, and discussions are underway with major institutions to collaborate on their first hNFT collections. One involves a historical research and preservation project in which hNFT buyers would directly contribute to the project's completion.

Our debut collection, Hominins, is the first hNFT collection by world renowned evolutionary artist John Gurche. It features 12 reconstructions of ape-like and more modern hominins, eight of which are exhibited in the Smithsonian Institution's Hall of Human Origins.

While TID hNFTs maintain stylistic coherence within a collection, each is handmade, completely unique and equal in terms of rarity. They are sold on OpenSea at a fixed price of between 0.28 and 0.38 Ether (Hominins will sell for 0.38 Ether). A list of collections, academic advisors and artists is provided below, along with release dates and prices.

Homo sapiens are the only survivors of a once diverse group of humans and human-like apes, collectively known as the hominins. So far the group includes around 20 known species. What did those hominins look like?

TID's utility plan for hNFT buyers complements our digital collectibles with tangible rewards. For the collector who buys any hNFT from one of the season's six collections, we will give a hardcover anthology of our 2022/23 hNFT editions, called "The Future of the Past." Those who buy eight hNFTs receive a Global Museum Pass, which grants free year-long access to over 100 of the world's top museums. The collector who buys 24 hNFTs gets a 33x33 inch state-of-the-art digital Tokenframe to display their NFTs at home, office or event.

For us at TID, the blockchain is a history recording machine, the beginning of an immutable encyclopedia. Publishing for future generations is a great responsibility. We take it very seriously.”

Victor Zabrockis - Digital Anthropologist

TID envisions its hNFT collections as the starting point of an ever-expanding encyclopedia of digital art on the blockchain to explore, collect, share and enjoy history.

Finally, TID will donate 3% of all hNFT sales to organizations dedicated to historical accuracy, research and preservation. One percent each will go to: FactCheck.org, The National Trust for Historic Preservation and the American Historical Association.
