GoCaine uses area control mechanics from the ancient game of surrounding stones known as Weiqi in China, Baduk in Korea, and Go in Japan. It is a game of both area control and logistical and economic efficiency. Players deploy multipurpose security cells to gain control of territory from which they can buy, ship, or sell

Players buy political influence to protect their shipments from interdiction operations and to utilize law enforcement to disrupt opponents’ supply lines. Alliances can be made and broken, making for lively social interaction.
