“One day you’re graduating from high school, and the next you’re living in a dorm on a university campus. That summer in-between flies by!” says Dr. Jed Macosko, academic director of AcademicInfluence.com and professor of physics at Wake Forest University. “We’ve packed our years of college prep knowledge into one place where students, parents, and family can make sure every to-do list item is handled wisely. Students have enough to consider without worrying that they’ve forgotten some essential step in the college prep process. AcademicInfluence.com helps ease that worry.”

The guide includes a comprehensive, downloadable PDF shopping list of items to consider bringing to college, covering school supplies, electronics, household items, healthcare & toiletries, dorm necessities & decorations, and “fun stuff.” Also, the guide covers those essentials that might go overlooked such as verifying transfer credits, exploring work-study options, and even connecting with family members and friends before leaving for college.

This guide also contains a link to “How to Prepare for Online College This Summer,” a set of tips for students who will begin online college for the first time this fall. From setting up a remote workspace to connecting with academic advisers and even visiting the online college’s physical campus, online students get helpful advice and planning tips unique to their academic needs.

“Students have to make a lot of adjustments during those first weeks of college,” says Macosko. “With help from our guide, students can reduce the stress of those adjustments. With careful planning and a few smart moves this summer, students can start the new year focused on what really matters: succeeding in college.”
