individuals who visited the booth, members of the Digitalage team explored the convention with a camera crew as they filmed content to give those who aren't in attendance a look into the VidCon experience. Throughout the day, the team interviewed major influencers on which platforms they use the most, what they hope to gain from the convention, and what changes they would like to see in social media. This content will be disseminated on Digitalage's social media platforms in the upcoming days.

As the convention moves into day three, Digitalage will continue to build relationships with future users, identify major influencers for their partnership program, provide a unique content creation experience to those who visit the booth, and promote the platform. CEO Peter Michaels and CCO Curt Doty are in attendance and will continue to utilize their presence at the booth as an opportunity to give those who visit a chance to speak directly to them about Digitalage.

CEO Peter Michaels states "The convention has been a great success so far. We will continue to optimize this momentum, ensuring that we are seizing every opportunity to introduce the platform, identify potential collaborations, and get real time feedback on what we can do to make Digitalage more exceptional than it already is."
