How Sprint Data Solutions Worldwide Marketing Got Started

Sprint Data Solutions Worldwide Marketing began as an idea from its founder, a disabled veteran. When the responsibilities of military service had been completed, the next step after the country's defense was the economy's growth. In this case, the growth would come by helping businesses accumulate more clients or customers, the most important element of success. A start-up was formed dedicated to this goal and today proudly boasts a staff with over 50 years of combined industry experience in the marketing sector.

Sprint Data Solutions Worldwide Marketing first went into operation during a period of transition. The dominant forms of marketing were still traditional, such as print and radio advertising, but digital marketing had made its debut, and many suspected it would make a big contribution. The company's area of interest was direct mail marketing, a field that also imparted relevant skillsets in data acquisition, management and analytics. As some had predicted, however, digital marketing's relevance grew explosively, but Sprint Data Solutions Worldwide Marketing was positioned to use its data-centric skills as an early mover advantage. It integrated digital marketing into its services, resulting in major gains for the company and the clients it served.

Currently, Sprint Data Solutions Worldwide Marketing has pushed its services well beyond the initial service range of only its hometown in Las Vegas, Nevada. The rest of the United States is now covered, including Alaska and Hawaii. Organizations looking to cover the remainder of North America can request databases to access the markets in Canada and Mexico. And for groups that want to go international, it's possible to cross the Atlantic and get databases for entry in markets of the European Union, such as nations like France.

Recognizing Service

The ability to volunteer time and even mortal safety for the defense of a nation, especially in a period without any war, should never be taken lightly. Veterans have taken it upon themselves to

take direct, personal responsibility for the safety of the body politic, defending it with their lives when civilians do not. There are many reasons and many walks of life from which veterans come, but whether they are on the front lines, in direct combat, or working in support roles, they all should have that contribution recognized.

Unfortunately, that doesn't always happen. While some veterans transition from military service to taking up product lives in society, others sometimes need a little help. Post-traumatic stress disorder, difficulties adjusting to civilian life, and sometimes bad luck can put veterans in positions they don't deserve. Donations can be an important way for civilians to recognize their service.

Organizations Have Opportunities

There are many ways to help veterans, whether providing financial assistance, emotional support, or professional development opportunities. Different donors will have different interests and even marketing potential based on their areas of interest in helping veterans. This also holds true for charities and businesses interested in veteran donors.

Depending on the demographic and specific area of interest, donors can be appealed to for different charities, purchase, or even investment opportunities. More affluent donors, for example, may be receptive to construction proposals for veteran housing or training facilities. Medical opportunities, such as investments in replacement prosthetic limbs or assisting with other disabilities from military injuries, can be another opportunity with a higher level of interest when approaching people who have already donated to veterans.

Reaching Veteran Donors

Sprint Data Solutions Worldwide Marketing has large lists of veteran donors all over America. While databases can be geared to nationwide efforts, they also scope down to a specific region, such as targeting only veteran donors of the Mid-West. Single states can also be targeted if a veteran donor effort is primarily operating in Ohio. It's even possible to target one specific neighborhood in a city or town, such as reaching out only to veteran donors in Brooklyn, New York City.

Donor lists can also be categorized according to demographics. Some veteran donors can be reached based on ethnicity, such as appealing primarily to African-American donors. Faith-based distinctions can also be made, such as reaching out only to Mormon veteran donors. Even financial categories are available, such as targeting only high net-worth individuals who have donated to veterans.

Contact details have multiple formats depending on the need. Physical mailing addresses are the standard for direct mail marketing. For digital marketing needs, Email addresses are available. Those wishing to use a telemarketing strategy can access home telephone numbers, while cellular numbers can be provided for any marketing needs based on SMS/Text-based media strategies.

If clients would like hands-on involvement in a direct mail campaign but lack experience, special turnkey direct mail solutions are available. This service guides clients step-by-step through the whole direct mail campaign process. From planning and design, printing and manufacturing materials, and finally distribution using the required listings, it's all there from start to finish.
