A paper bag is one made of paper, most commonly kraft paper. Depending on client demand, paper bags can be created from virgin or recycled fibres. Flat paper, multiwall paper sacks, and handled bags are some of the most common paper bags on the market. Paper bags are frequently used as shopping bags and for the packaging of some consumer goods. They carry various range of products from electronics, groceries, glass bottles, clothing, books, toiletries, and several other goods. They can also function as means of transport in day-to-day activities.

The need for easy and customizable carriers of things, the global paper bag market has been steadily growing over the forecast period. Due to increased ecological concerns and increasing water pollution caused by plastics worldwide, the United Nations Environment Program (UNEP) began a Europe campaign to raise awareness about the disadvantages of using micro-plastics and escaping micro-plastic's excessive use. Paper bags are environmentally degradable, recyclable, and reusable, making them better from plastic bags.
