Flawless by Angie Crabtree

From carrots to carats, Crabtree has come a long way from her humble beginnings in rural Northern California. Fascinated by American consumerism and pop culture from a young age, she was inspired to step out of her comfort zone and explore the realms of materialism and consumption.

From an early age Crabtree has been passionate about teaching art to others, having spent over 15 years of her life dedicated to education. In 2009 Crabtree graduated from the prestigious San Francisco Art Institute where she studied painting.

Her first show in 2012 focused on the American dream of wealth and luxury, featuring a giant painting of a lottery ticket, a hundred-dollar bill, and blank check amongst other similarly themed works. As part of the show, Crabtree unveiled the world's first ever large painting of a diamond, 5 ft tall, landing her the nickname of "The Diamond Painter™."

"I was passionate about teaching kids but I also had bills to pay and my own dream of becoming a professional artist to pursue," says Crabtree. "I have fond memories of panning for gold and gems with my grandfather. I couldn't afford a diamond, so I thought the best way to get one was to paint one!"
