The increasing global burden of cancer has significantly mounted over the past decade. As tumor chips can simulate the 3D microstructure and microphysiological functions of in vivo human organs/tissues, providing a better understanding of the mechanisms of tumor growth and metastasis. Thus, the increasing prevalence of cancer is anticipated to support the growth of the organ-tumor-on-a-chip market during the forecast period. Complexity of organ-tumor-on-chip due to esoteric microfabrication technologies makes it difficult to simulate the various complex signal regulation responses of other nonadjacent organs in the human body to cancer, which can hamper the market growth.
