Nanomedicine is an application of nanotechnology that deals in prevention & treatment of diseases in humans. This technology uses sub micrometer-sized particles for diagnosis, treatment, and prevention of diseases. Nanomedicines are advantageous over generic drugs in several aspects such as they help to reduce renal excretion, improve ability of drugs to accumulate at pathological sites, and enhance therapeutic index of drugs. Thus, nanomedicine is used in a wide range of applications that include aerospace materials, cosmetics, and medicine.

The major factors that drive growth of the nanomedicine market are increase in development of nanotechnology-based drugs, advantages of nanomedicine in various healthcare applications, and growth in need for therapies with fewer side effects. However, long approval process and risks associated with nanomedicine (environmental impacts) are expected to hinder the market growth. Conversely, growth of healthcare facilities in emerging economies are expected to offer lucrative opportunities for growth of the market.
