Respiratory Inhalers are portable devices used to deliver medications for obstructive airway diseases such as Chronic Obstructive Pulmonology Disorders (COPD), #asthma, among others into the airways. Inhaled pharmacologic therapies are the cornerstone of treatment and prevention for patients suffering from asthma and COPD.

The inhalers provide the benefit of avoiding the systemic exposure of drugs and are delivered topically into the airways leading to local efficacy within the lungs in comparison to oral or parenteral formulations. Respiratory inhalers feature sensors that can detect whether an individual is in a polluted or pollen-filled environment, send helpful reminders, and tell if one needs to check its inhaler technique. An individual does not require to keep their own records because they're all designed to automatically measure how often one uses its inhaler.
