Industrial gas companies are increasingly supplying carbon dioxide emitted from industrial facilities to greenhouses. CO₂ emitted from power plants and refineries are stored in local capacities and empty natural gas fields, and transported to greenhouses via pipelines. This process acts as an intelligent CO₂ recycling solution and reduces the carbon footprint of greenhouses. For example, Linde collects carbon flow from the Shell oil refinery near Rotterdam, Netherlands, and supplies about 400,000 tonnes of CO₂ to over 580 greenhouses across Rotterdam and Amsterdam. This saves the combustion of 115 million cubic meters of natural gas and avoids emissions of 205,000 tonnes per year of CO₂.
