

LinkDaddy® Matures from a One-person Business to a White Label SEO Services Agency

LinkDaddy has grown from a one-person agency based out of Florida to a fully scaled SEO service provider with nearly 60 team members across the world

MIAMI, FLORIDA, UNITED STATES, July 19, 2022 /EINPresswire.com/ -- Based out of Miami, Florida, LinkDaddy now has a staff of 55 that works for clients across the world, most small businesses and young enterprises exuding the startup energy. While a few agencies tend to be choosy about the scale of business their clients should have, the LinkDaddy team looks at all businesses with the ability to succeed if they are given the right tools, specifically the type of digital efficiencies that LinkDaddy provides with its suite of white label SEO services. While the team at LinkDaddy continues to expand, even today, there is no physical office address as the team collaborates remotely, and the talent pool is expanding with more digital marketing experts from diverse cultural backgrounds coming under the fold – a big reason why the firm has also started catering to non-English, foreign language business owners who need digital marketing services.

Kenny Trinh, CEO of Netbooknews, says, “Essentially, backlinks act as a vote of trust. The more high-quality backlinks your website has, the more likely it will earn higher rankings.”

It was easy to succumb to the temptation of choosing a keyword domain name to get more competitive online, but the name LinkDaddy was chosen in tune with the best industry practices, as a means to inspire confidence and credibility. The best domain name practices suggest that the domain names should consist of verbs or nouns under 12 characters. The word “Link” is short for a backlink, and “Daddy” represents a mature, aged, trustworthy, and strong authority.

When put together, LinkDaddy is meant to signify a digital agency that has unmatched superiority in terms of helping businesses get more competitive with its unique, backlink and link-building services.

The journey, starting as a 1-man company, has not been easy. Tony Peacock, CEO - LinkDaddy, always believed that a digital service agency that honestly tries to understand the real problems of local business owners can set itself apart from the pool of similar-looking SEO firms that are more focused on selling standards, one-solutions-fits-everyone service packages. Just a few months from starting out as a single-person operation, LinkDaddy started establishing itself as a reliable link-building partner for businesses, helping young and under-served websites increase their domain authority with legitimate backlinks and industry-best SEO practices.

One of the many backlink-building challenges for businesses is finding an agency they can trust. Link building can be achieved in many ways. Sometimes, using spurious methods, and indulging in black hat practices, makes it easy for some agencies to quickly build a handful of backlinks. While the initial results might impress, eventually such backlink methods lead to penalization and can hamper the overall domain authority of a website. In comparison, authentic backlink building services rendered via a white hat, legitimate methods might absorb a bit more time, but the results are usually more sustainable and there is no risk of being penalized by global search engine authorities like Google that can take action against websites that continue to violate Google Webmaster Guidelines and this includes link building practices that use links from suspicious sites that are built for merely pushing through backlinks without providing any relevant content. And the consequences can be severe. Google penalization takes a lot of effort to be challenged and reversed and sometimes, the damages can be irreparable.

Nearly 94% of content on the internet never gets backlinked with 41% of companies believing that backlinking is the biggest challenge. For determining backlinking quality, marketers consider the site's domain authority (65%), domain ratings (48%) & page authority (36%)

For businesses, differentiating between the two approaches can be nearly impossible since a digital agency's work is hard to thoroughly verify at all times. This is why some business owners are very apprehensive about hiring digital marketing teams or SEO agencies. LinkDaddy has been able to end this speculation for its clients, by making its processes more transparent and ensuring that only industry-recommended link-building practices are followed. Differentiating itself from digital agencies that tend to farm, sell, and distribute backlinks without quality control, LinkDaddy provides a unique element of trustworthiness.

Business owners can trust the team even if they don't understand the fundamentals of optimizing for global search engines, and the agency is adding more value to its service structure, such as growing its blog network for niche relevant backlinks that helps to publish and syndicate branded content across verified newsrooms and media channels. The goodwill of happy customers has multiplied in a short time, and it has helped LinkDaddy to grow its leads and acquire new accounts via real recommendations and without spending big on advertising campaigns. By adding more to its sales funnel without spending excessively on online promotion, LinkDaddy continues to nurture more clients via more affordable service packages, many of whom have signed up with the SEO agency for a year via annual contracts.

"Despite the many changes and updates in SEO over the past few years, link building has remained a solid SEO strategy that helps bring in a consistent amount of traffic to any website" - Sean Si [CEO and Founder of SEO Hacker, Qeryz, Sigil, Workplays]

Many business owners perhaps don't realize that link building is not a one-time effort or a strategy—it is more of an outcome from consistent, well-directed efforts. If businesses realize this, they can quickly identify the agencies that tend to present link building as an instant solution or a packaged solution for every business website. In contrast, LinkDaddy understands that guest blogging, press releases, and social influencer marketing are streams that help to boost & better the link-building outcomes. It needs to be worked upon consistently to ensure sufficient traffic and more relevant clicks are driven to a website or a web store.

For this, SEO agencies need a consistent supply of good, authentic content. For many business owners and the traditional SEO agency, creating so much content is better outsourced but this can bring about extra costing and unwarranted delays. To ensure such issues can be managed better, LinkDaddy has set up a team of experts that specializes in press release writing and creating relevant content that helps to drive traffic from the targeted audience. As a part of ensuring that its client gets the maximum SEO boost for the services they purchase from LinkDaddy, the agency has been collaborating and setting up more newsroom ecosystems. This ensures that LinkDaddy has direct access to publishing, syndicating, and promoting every bit of content generated for its clients.

The SEO backlink service had a recent boost when LinkDaddy announced its PR writing services where even smaller businesses can order a PR that is usually drafted and published within a week and then syndicated using LinkDaddy's unique blog network and newsroom outreach, creating valuable backlinks for businesses that have traditionally remained away from hiring an SEO agency assuming that the services are hard to understand, difficult to trust, and impossible to be affordable in the long run. This is just another example of how LinkDaddy is changing the perception of digital marketing services for small business owners, providing them the ability to compete with the bigger brand names and corporates in their industry or marketplace.
