The expanding automotive industry and the rising use of ethanol as an alternative to conventional fuel while enhancing the efficiency, torque, and power of the engine are among the primary factors driving the ethanol market. In addition to this, the increasing production of bioethanol, which is procured from plants, such as maize and sugar canes, owing to the growing climate change concerns, is propelling the market growth. Furthermore, the elevating adoption of alcohol-based hand sanitizers, wherein ethanol is utilized as a key ingredient on account of the sudden outbreak of coronavirus (COVID-19) disease, is positively influencing the global market. Additionally, the inflating utilization of ethanol in the pharmaceutical sector as a solvent and preservative in various liquid-based medications is anticipated to fuel the ethanol market in the coming years.
