

Earth Enterprise Sales Executive Andy Hort Says Hello To Children With Disabilities - Creates A League All Their Own

Andy Hort was inspired to start a challengers team as part of the Greenwich Village Little League after coaching with them for 14 years.

NEW YORK, NEW YORK, UNITED STATES, July 27, 2022

/EINPresswire.com/ -- Six years ago, Andy Hort of Earth Enterprise, a 107 year young environmental printer headquartered in NYC, attended a fundraiser that would not only change his life, but the lives of local children with disabilities. The theme of the fundraiser was "How do you say hello to a child with disabilities?" The answer: "HELLO". With that, Andy, a 14-year volunteer coach of baseball, decided to start the "Challenger League" which invited children with disabilities to participate in playing baseball. He also invited volunteers from the community, both children and adults to assist in the league. In its first year, six children with disabilities attended. Now, in its sixth year, more than 60 children participate, and the volunteers have more than doubled.

I find that when you take a child and put them with another child, the disabilities disappear, and they just become children, having fun as children.”

Andy Hort, a 14-year volunteer coach of baseball in NYC, decided to start the "Challenger League" which invited children with disabilities to participate in playing baseball.

The secret sauce, according to Andy, is "the buddy system. "I found out that these children deal with parents, teachers, therapists and doctors, but they don't have a lot of interaction with other children. I find that when you take a child and put them with another child, then the disabilities disappear, and they just become children, and have fun as children."

The end result is an environment that is rewarding for everyone, including the volunteers. "You have to be self-less" implores Andy. The Challenger League is exactly what selfless looks like, and accordingly, Spectrum News 1 named Andy Hort is the New Yorker of The Week.
