The medical styrene block copolymer market consists of sales of the medical styrene block copolymers by entities (organizations, sole traders, and partnerships) that are used in the manufacture of medical products such as surgical drapery, needle shields, dental dams, drip chambers, and exercise bands. Medical styrene block copolymers refer to thermoplastic elastomers. These materials look like plastic but behave like rubber. This material helps to make products flexible, stretchable, and elastic. It can also be used as an alternative to natural rubber, silicone rubber, thermoplastic polyurethane (TPU), or polyvinyl chloride (PVC).

An increase in product developments and innovations is one of the key medical styrenic block copolymer market trends gaining popularity. Major companies operating in the medical styrene block copolymer sector are focused on developing new technologies to strengthen their position in the market. For instance, in February 2020, Clariant AG, a Switzerland-based company that manufactures health care polymer devices, launched medical fillers named MEVOPUR, which are manufactured by using hydrolytic degradation technology. These new filters are specially designed to resist degradation caused by exposure to high humidity and temperature extremes. These filters had high loading capacities of radiopaque metals, as these fillers are known to exacerbate the degradation effect.
