Digital Workplace Experience

The Digital Workplace Experience conference (DWX) is a quarterly event focused on employee experience and the digital workplace produced and hosted by SMG. This quarter's event is virtual, and qualified attendees may attend free of charge.

Kicking off the two-day event on August 3, 2022, DoorDash's Lisa Lee will discuss "Developing Key Employee Skills and Capabilities." Experts will moderate and participate in discussions centered around topics such as "Adapting Your Leadership Style" and "Creating a Resilient Organization." The agenda will also cover employee lifecycle and leadership development and will conclude on August 4, with the keynote "Workforce Strategies from America's Fractured Frontlines" presented by Reworked's Senior Editor, Siobhan Fagan, and April Hansen, Group President of Workforce Solutions at Aya Healthcare.

The DWX conference is a unique opportunity to see inside the world's most successful workplaces and discover the latest patterns, best practices, and research influencing the top teams.

“In this post-pandemic, roller-coaster ride of economic change, employers and employees are in an ongoing power shift, and workplace professionals are trying to understand and adjust,” said Mike Prokopeak, Editor-in-Chief of Reworked. “DWX is the perfect opportunity to hear and learn from employee experience and industry leaders who are in the thick of it day in and day out. It’s an incredible experience open to anyone who wants to learn.”

Unique to the August event, the Reworked team will present key findings from the 2022 State of the Digital Workplace Report, which is a compilation of survey responses from more than 1,200 enterprise-level digital workplace executives and practitioners who answered the survey between early February and mid-March 2022. The report highlights the current state of the digital workplace - the challenges and opportunities - and offers insight into what’s next and how companies plan to navigate the hybrid age.
