Dental implant is a medical device used as a frame to connect a dental prosthetic, including crown, bridge, denture, facial prosthesis, and jaw or skull bone through surgical procedure. These implants are artificial tooth roots implanted into the gums/jaws and are not visible post the surgical procedure. Several radiographic imaging options are useful for dental implant diagnosis and treatment planning. The options range from standard intraoral projections (e.g., periapical, occlusal) and extraoral projections (e.g., panoramic, cephalometric) to more complex cross-sectional imaging (e.g., computed tomography [CT], cone-beam computed tomography [CBCT]). Dental implants can offer support for a variety of dental restoration options such as dental crowns, bridges, and dentures. This allows patients to have some options when considering restorative treatment using dental implants. These medical devices are commonly used during tooth replacement procedures. Dental implant comprises titanium-based cylinder and additional prosthetics, including crown/cap. The report analyzes the market on the basis of product, materials, and region.
