The Appalachian League is a collegiate summer baseball league that operates in the Appalachian regions of Tennessee, Virginia, West Virginia, and North Carolina. Designed for rising freshmen and sophomores using wood bats, its season runs from June to August. The summer league is organized by Major League Baseball and USA Baseball.

Major League Baseball and USA Baseball are currently working jointly in a format which allows the Appalachian League to feature the nation's top rising college freshmen and sophomores in wood-bat play each summer. The new format affirms MLB's commitment to the region, maintains the existing branding of the league, and assures that the Appalachian League will continue to host high-caliber baseball and future Major Leaguers for years to come.

The Appalachian League is a part of the Prospect Development Pipeline ("PDP"), the collaborative effort between MLB and USA Baseball to help establish a player development pathway for amateur baseball players in the United States. In addition, the summer collegiate league will be an integral part of the identification and development process for the USA Baseball Collegiate National Team and other future national teams.
