Used cooking oil (UCO) refers to residual oils and fats produced from households, restaurants, hotels, and food processing units. This leftover cooking oil is primarily obtained from palm, sunflower, olive, corn, canola, soy oils, and animal fats. It is environment-friendly, cost-effective, and is used in bulk quantities for the mass production of industrial greases, paint remover, composts, animal feed, soaps, shampoo, and moisturizers. Besides this, UCO also finds extensive applications in the production of biodiesel and oleochemicals.

As the novel coronavirus (COVID-19) crisis takes over the world, we are continuously tracking the changes in the markets, as well as the industry behaviors of the consumers globally and our estimates about the latest market trends and forecasts are being done after considering the impact of this pandemic.

Global Used Cooking Oil Market Trends and Drivers:

The market is primarily driven by the rising adoption of bio-based fuels due to the growing consumer awareness regarding green energy and carbon emissions caused by conventional fuels. In addition, the increasing utilization of UCO in manufacturing animal feeds is contributing to market growth. Moreover, with significant developments in the processing and manufacturing technologies, the leading manufacturers are developing ingenious ozone-treated oil with high calorific worth and lower ignition points. Furthermore, the implementation of favorable government policies, escalating product demand for biodiesel production, and extensive research and development (R&D) activities are also creating a positive market outlook across the globe.
