Reports and Data. The market is distinguished by the involvement of various companies engaged in the manufacturing of high volume actuators. The growing prevalence of respiratory diseases, like asthma, especially in developed countries, is projected to drive the market for aerosol inhalers worldwide. The rising usage of relief sprays by physiotherapists and players in sports for on-field injuries treatment is anticipated to drive the aerosol demand in healthcare applications, thus driving the market growth of actuators.

The increased usage of personal grooming products due to growing inclination towards personal care and appearance is a significant factor in propelling market growth. Increasing aerosol actuators' usage in nasal sprays, therapeutic lotion dispensers, and other easy-to-use prescription items is projected to fuel the demand for aerosol actuators in the upcoming years. Technological advancements in the design and development of actuators for improving product aesthetics and ease of usage have resulted in increased product demand, e.g., the factories in China import low-cost raw materials from the industries in the market.

Key industry players are engaged in producing personalized and regular actuators supplied via a dedicated supply chain connectivity leading aerosol producers and fillers. The majority of the company's large-scale production runs the industry by direct partnerships with leading aerosol manufacturers. With the growing demand for respiratory devices and asthma inhalers, the industry has experienced strong demand for dose actuators in the healthcare sector over the last few years.

The COVID-19 impact:
