Key Trends In The Global Wood Preservatives Market

Wood preservatives market trends include major players continuously investing in research and development (R&D) activities to manufacture eco-friendly wood preservatives which is a shaping the wood preservatives industry outlook. Considering the environmental rules and regulations, the wood preservatives manufacturers are developing natural or eco-friendly wood preservatives so that they will be less harmful to the environment. For instance, UltraPole NXT, developed by Viance, was awarded the R&D 100 2020 Award for its sustainable solution. The active ingredient DCOI (4,5-Dichloro-2-n-octyl-4-isothiazolinone-3-one) does its job as a highly effective wood preservative. DCOI that enters the environment degrades rapidly. Further, in March 2019, LANXESS launched Levanyl X ranges, aqueous, solvent-free, and organic pigment that can be used in wood preservatives. Similarly, the companies such as Troy, Janssen Pharmaceutica, Koppers are developing wood preservatives that can be eco-friendly for the environment.

The wood preservatives market consists of sales of wood preservatives by entities (organizations, sole traders, and partnerships) that manufacture wood preservatives that are used to protect the wood. Wood preservatives are chemicals that can control wood degradation problems due to fungal rot or decay, sapstain, molds, or wood-destroying insects. According to the wood preservatives market overview, it is mainly used to increase the durability and resistance of wood, timber, wood structures, or engineered wood.
