The term prophylaxis means treatment given or action taken to prevent disease. The prophylaxis of organ rejection, refers to the prevention of organ rejection by use of medicines. The patients who undergo transplantation, must be maintained on an immunosuppression regimen for rejection prophylaxis to help ensure graft survival. The transplant rejection is a process, in which a transplant recipient's immunity the current rejection prophylaxis implements use of calcineurin inhibitors, mTOR inhibitors, antimetabolite agents, and corticosteroids. The treatment agents improve the short term consequences of the organ transplantation, but certain improvements. The recipient patients, who have undergone solid organ transplantation, should take anti-rejection medicines. This is because the immunity system would destroy the transplanted organ.
