Global Physical Therapy Market Overview:

Physical therapy is a term that refers to a variety of procedures used to relieve pain and restore mobility to injured human body parts like limbs and joints. It gives those with serious musculoskeletal and neuromuscular issues, whether acquired or inherited, a new lease on life. It's also administered to patients after procedures like joint replacement and muscle restoration, in which a bodily portion is immobilised for an extended length of time. Since medical improvements have boosted the survival rate of premature infants and trauma and stroke victims, the demand for evaluation and treatment of their biophysical disorders has grown. This is propelling the global physical therapy services market to new heights.

Physical therapy is a type of treatment that employs practises such as exercise, massage, and others to alleviate any sickness or wound. Geriatric physical treatments, cardiac and pulmonary physiotherapy, neurological physiotherapy, and other sorts of fleshly therapies are some of the most common.

Physical Therapy Market Dynamics

Drivers

Advancements in healthcare sector The market is predicted to rise due to an increase in the number of incidents occurring around the world. Other factors such as advancements in healthcare facilities, availability of physical therapy at healthcare facilities such as hospitals, private practices, and others, rising population ageing, and increasing number of people suffering from neurological disease are expected to boost the physical therapy market from 2022 to 2029.

Technological advancements

Low treatment costs for physical therapy rehabilitation solutions, increasing launches and approvals of novel virtual physical therapy solutions, and growing collaborations and partnerships among market participants are all factors driving market expansion. Physiotherapy equipment demand is predicted to rise as a result of technological advancements and novelties by leading businesses, boosting market growth.

Rise in demand of physical therapy services

The overall growth of global physical therapy rehabilitation solutions is likely to be driven by rising awareness of the value of physical treatment that produces benefits without side effects. People receive physical therapy in a variety of venues, including hospitals, outpatient clinics, private offices, sports and fitness activities, and others. Physical therapy services are in higher demand in elementary and secondary schools and sports and fitness centres for special education kids.

Opportunities

More individuals are engaged in sports and severe physical activity around the world, which is contributing to an increase in the number of injuries associated with these activities. It is a significant market growth component. With an increasing older population, falls are becoming more common in both indoor and outdoor settings. This is a natural result of joints failing as they age, resulting in an increase in the demand for physical therapy services.

COVID-19 Impact on Physical Therapy Market

The global pandemic COVID-19 had an impact on the physical therapy market, either directly or indirectly. Because the sickness is presently infecting many active individuals in the industry and service sectors, Coronavirus Disease 2019 (COVID-19) is likely to substantially impact society and the economy. Patients' functional capacity and, as a result, their occupational performance may be impacted by the illness in the long run. The effects of COVID-19 on occupational health were investigated in this study, with a focus on the role of physical therapy in rehabilitation.

In April 2020, ATI Physical Therapy, a privately held, nationally recognised healthcare organisation based in the United States that specialises in outpatient rehabilitation and related healthcare services, has introduced a virtual or online physical therapy service.
