Living with a pet helps people manage their stress and despair. Strolling a cat or dog or making other kind gestures like that can help someone feel better and lower their blood pressure. As a result, more than half of people worldwide own at least one pet, with dogs being the most common, followed by cats. The care and upkeep of an animal's health and wellbeing is referred to as pet grooming. The market for pet grooming products is expanding rapidly across the globe as a result of rising pet ownership, pet humanization, and premiumization demands. The health and fitness of domesticated animals have improved as a result of growing humanization and increased awareness of the ethical treatment of animals. Increased pet ownership has resulted in increased demand for pets.

Nearly 30% of Americans with allergies experience allergic reactions to cats and dogs, according to the Asthma and Allergy Foundation of America. Allergies to cats and dogs can cause a variety of symptoms, including runny noses, skin membrane swelling and itching, and itchy, watery eyes. Pet allergies are becoming more common among individuals, which limits pet adoption rates and restrains the market's expansion for pet grooming goods.
