“We are excited to expand our partnership with OPEN MINDS,” said Mike Rhoades, CEO of Blaze Advisors. “With the increased human stress as a result of the pandemic and resultant economic downturn, the impact of behavioral health disorder and mental stress is an even greater contributor to overall health care costs for payers and employers. Incorporating behavioral health organizations into value-based arrangements to improve care coordination, access to care, and continuity of care is critical for payers in improving and delivering better care. It is a ripe time for quality behavioral health organizations to be included and incorporated into organized systems of payment and care to drive improved care for people and populations. We are a team of behavioral health experts with a strong knowledge base dedicated to growing competencies for behavioral health organizations by combining experiential operational competency development, population health data, analytics, and technology solutions to enable integrated patient care. Our partnership with OPEN MINDS enhances our role as an industry thought leader.”
