The strong educational and experiential focus on board effectiveness, governance, compliance & ethics, cybersecurity, director roles & responsibilities, human capital / diversity, ESG, risk management, shareholder engagement, and strategy & risk oversight make this a fantastic credential for one of our officers, especially our CEO, to bring to our course offerings as well as our clients, says, Michael Zlotkowsky, Creative Director of ZenDev.

Since 2008, the American College of Corporate Directors credentials have represented the “gold standard” in corporate director education, and those executives who earn them are highly valued in the board community. To earn American College of Corporate Directors Professional Director status, a member must accumulate a set number of credits earned by attendance at certain ACCD and Corporate Board Member programs and events. The Masters Professional Director designation is the 4th of 5 levels of board credentialing and in addition to have earned the level of Advanced Professional Director the individual must a minimum of 2 years public company board experience, attend a bi-annual Boardroom Summit or ACCD Directors Forum, and annually complete an additional 10 credits of board education to earn and maintain certification.
