The aerial imaging market consists of sales of aerial imaging solutions by entities (organizations, sole traders, and partnerships) that refer to pictures or images captured from an airborne craft. Cameras are attached to airborne crafts such as helicopters, parachutes, aircraft, kites, unmanned aerial vehicles (UAVs), balloons, and more to help with assessing risk mitigation, resource planning, engineering, and others.

Global Aerial Imaging Market Trends

According to the aerial imaging industry analysis, the launch of new technology is a key trend gaining popularity. Technological advancements in aerial imaging include the launch of drones with advanced functions and features such as supporting apps, advanced photo and video capabilities, better transmission, reduced weight, improved sensors, and more. Major companies operating in the aerial imaging market are focused on offering technological advancements in aerial imaging to gain a competitive edge and strengthen their position in the market. For instance, in November 2020, DJI, a Chinese technology company, launched the DJI Mini 2 drone with the DJI Fly app. This drone can record up to 4K/30p video, capture Raw+JPEG files, and features DJI's robust OcuSync 2.0 transmission technology instead of relying on Wi-Fi. Additional features include a low weight of 249g, a 1/2.3" CMOS image sensor, a 31-minute flight time, and others. The DJI Fly app includes a slick, pared-down, and intuitive interface.
