The enzyme inhibitor market consists of sales of enzyme inhibitors by entities (organizations, sole traders, and partnerships) that are used to treat Gaucher disease and also used as a tool for studying enzymes. Enzyme inhibitors are chemicals that attach to enzymes and prevent them from working. They attach to enzyme active sites and reduce enzyme compatibility with substrates, preventing the formation of enzyme-substrate complexes that result in reducing the reaction's catalysis and preventing the creation of products. Enzymes help to speed up chemical reactions in the body and take part in many cell functions, including cell signaling, growth, and division.

Strategic partnerships and collaborations have emerged as one of the key enzyme inhibitor market trends gaining popularity. Major companies operating in enzyme inhibitors are focused on strategic partnerships to meet customer demand. For instance, in April 2021, Artios Pharma Limited, a UK-based DNA damage response company that also provides enzyme inhibitors, collaborated with Novartis International AG, a Switzerland-based pharmaceutical corporation, to uncover and verify new generation DDR (DNA Damage Response) targets to advance Novartis' Radioligand Therapies (RLT). This partnership with Novartis will be utilized to find and validate next-generation DDR targets to improve Novartis' radioligand therapies. Furthermore, in March 2020, Bayer AG, a Germany-based pharmaceutical and life sciences company, collaborated with Curadev, an Indian-based pharmaceutical company that provides enzyme inhibitors, to discover new drug candidates to provide treatment for lung diseases, cardiovascular diseases, and other inflammatory diseases.
