The aircraft actuator market consists of sales of aircraft actuators by entities (organizations, sole proprietors, and partnerships) that are used to adjust flight control surfaces such as elevators, rudders, ailerons, flaps, slats, and spoilers. Aircraft actuators are mechanical devices that can transfer and divert motion energy from one form to another. In the aviation sector, actuation systems are used in a variety of ways. It is responsible for everything from cargo bay doors and landing gear to engine components and flight control surfaces.

Global Aircraft Actuator Market Trends

Technological advancements have emerged as one of the key aircraft actuator market trends gaining popularity. Major companies operating in the aircraft actuator market are focused on developing technologically advanced products to strengthen their market position. For instance, in June 2021, Curtiss-Wright Corporation, a US-based aviation company, delivered the primary flight control actuators and control electronics to Eviation Aircraft for the all-electric Alice aircraft. The new Curtiss-Wright high-power density electromechanical actuators (EMA) provide Eviation with a modular, distributed solution that enables a flexible control architecture. Curtiss-Wright's electromechanical actuation (EMA) technology helps speed the development of all-electric regional commuter aircraft and reduces the risk. For a wide range of aviation applications, including flight controls, landing gear, and utility actuation, EMA technology offers significant advantages over traditional hydraulic techniques, such as enhanced dependability, improved energy economy, and decreased weight.
