

First 5 California Issues Statement on New Kids Data Report

Executive Director Highlights First 5 Efforts Combating Issues Affecting Californians

SACRAMENTO, CA, USA, August 12, 2022 /EINPresswire.com/ -- Today, First 5 California Executive Director Jackie

Thu-Huong Wong issued a statement on The Annie E. Casey Foundation's 2022 KIDS COUNT® Data Book, a yearly report on child and family well-being. The report found California ranked 33rd of all states in children's overall well-being and highlighted how anxiety and depression rose 70 percent in California's juvenile population in 2020, the first year of the pandemic.

"By now it is well-established that the COVID-19 pandemic created real conditions contributing to negative outcomes for children and families. For many California families—especially low-income families and communities of color—the pandemic exacerbated existing challenges to social, structural, and fiscal conditions contributing to California's low ranking in this report, especially in the area of behavioral and mental health," said Ms. Wong.

"As the Executive Director of First 5 California, I am proud that we are, and continue to be, at the forefront of investing in trauma-informed, healing-centered, and culturally responsive support systems focused on the whole child and whole family that provides parents and caregivers the necessary resources and tools to promote safe, stable, nurturing relationships and environments. We have a strong focus on equity and our investments are prioritized for low-income and communities of color, which represent outsized segments of the population negatively affected by adverse childhood experiences and behavioral health issues and outlined in the report," added Ms. Wong.
