The global autoinjectors market is expected to reach $5,732.6 million by 2027, registering a CAGR of 18.1% from 2020 to 2027, in terms of value.

Autoinjector is a medical device, which is used to administer a particular dose of drug into the body. These devices are easy to use, are cost effective, and can be used by patients or even by untrained professionals. These devices are preferred over conventional devices as they are efficient, with improved and technologically advanced drug delivery mechanisms. Autoinjectors are used in several applications such as rheumatoid arthritis, anemia, migraine, multiple sclerosis, and other therapies.

The demand for autoinjectors is projected to experience substantial growth in the future, owing to the rise in anaphylaxis cases globally. The increase in R&D activities by key companies to establish new technology based autoinjectors is also anticipated to fuel the demand for autoinjectors during the forecast period. However, alternate treatment options such as general injections and tablets are likely to hinder the market growth during the forecast period. The availability of low-cost biosimilars in combination with autoinjectors at lower price due to loss of patent is projected to provide industry players with remunerative incentives.
