Gas Hydrates Overview :-

The global gas hydrates market size was significantly robust in 2021 and is expected to register a rapid revenue CAGR over the forecast period. Gas hydrates market revenue growth is primarily driven by factors such as increasing popularity of environmental friendly and sustainable energy sources such as natural gas, wind, and solar energy and rising use of gas hydrates for methane gas storage.

Gas hydrates are solids formed of water and gas. These crystalline gas hydrates also known as natural gas hydrates, are formed when water molecule present around methane gas molecules at a specific temperature and pressure, lead to enclosure of these methane gas molecules by water molecules forming a cage-like structure. These structures have stability due to internal bond formation and is a great method for storage of methane gas molecules. Gas hydrates are present on all continents, exist in large quantities below sea floor, and are present in approximately seven hundred meters' thick layer, in association with permafrost in Arctic. Gas hydrates are unstable at normal sea-level pressures and temperatures making them difficult for analyses and study.
