Bone replacement is a surgical procedure that replaces missing bone to repair bone fractures that are very complex, pose a significant health risk to the patient, or fail to heal properly. The bone replacement procedure makes use of grafts, synthetic materials, and other biologics. Furthermore, some small or acute fractures can be cured without bone replacement, but the risk is greater for large fractures such as complex fractures. Bones generally have the ability to regenerate completely but require a very small fracture space or some sort of scaffold to do so.

The overall impact of COVID-19 pandemic is likely to remain fairly negative for medical companies in the bone replacement industry. Companies are facing a set-back, owing to the lockdown, which has led to disruptions in the supply chain activities across the globe. Moreover, key players in the industry are facing issues with regard to the availability of human resource for manufacturing of bone replacement at production facilities. In addition, end users such as hospitals and clinics reported decline in patient visits due to the lockdown restrictions implemented worldwide. However, this situation is expected to improve as government has started relaxing norms around the world for resuming business activities.
