violations, biodiversity loss, pandemics, weapons of mass destruction, and the water/ energy/ food security nexus.

James Thebaut, founder and producer, is an Army Veteran and has earned two Bachelors degrees and a Masters. He created and produced his first documentary, A Tale of Two Cities, while studying at the University of Washington. The documentary compared and contrasted Southern California to the Puget Sound region. The goal was to keep Seattle from repeating the ecological mistakes made in Orange County and the San Fernando Valley.

As a pioneer during the 70s, Jim created the first programmatic environmental statement in the US. His findings regarding proposed nuclear power plants near Seattle resulted in the withdrawal from the proposal. Through public education projects, documentaries, and commercial films, he has made an impact in helping bring awareness to issues such as illegal toxic waste dumping and toxicity of the human race, among other things.

Some of his work involves the 1986 CBS drama, A Deadly Business, starring Alan Arkin and Armand Assante, Bad Cops, Execution at Midnight, The Cold War and Beyond, and The Iceman: Conversations with a Killer, Beyond the Brink, Renewable Energy Desalination for the Middle East and North Africa, The American Southwest: Are We Running Dry?

James is a frequent speaker at conferences, the United Nations and the US Congress; and continues his drive to inform the world and initiate positive movement where his work continues to shape holistic global sustainability policies.
