Key Trends In The Cast Elastomer Market

The increasing use of bio-based raw materials in cast elastomers is shaping the cast elastomer market outlook. Companies in the cast elastomers sector are stepping up initiatives to develop bio-based products that will assist industry stakeholders in reducing their environmental impact and carbon footprint. For instance, in August 2020, Lanxess, a Germany-based specialty chemicals company developed a new line of MDI polyether prepolymers called Adiprene Green which is made from renewables and bio-based raw materials. The products can be used to make highly durable polyurethane (PU) elastomers in place of conventional fossil-based polyether prepolymers. The overall goal of Adiprene Green's development was to establish a line of bio-based prepolymers that would allow PU processors to generate products with a lower CO2 footprint.
