Forecast CAGR (2021-2026): 5%

Historical Market Size (2026): USD 307 million

Butylated hydroxytoluene is a common antioxidant and stabilizing agent in cosmetic and personal care products. It helps preserve product properties and performance, such as odor, color, and texture, as they are exposed to air and prone to oxidation.

Increasing R&D infrastructure and higher investment in research activities allow manufacturers to focus on product development activities and formulate improved products of higher quality to keep up with the growing competition in the butylated hydroxytoluene market. Demand for newspapers and magazines and the revival of building and construction projects in parts of Asia Pacific, such as India and China, will drive market growth during the forecast period.

Industry Definition and Major Segments

BHT is an antioxidant found in green algae bacteria and is derived from phenol. Because of its antioxidant properties, it is in high demand in a variety of industries.

Market Trends

Butylated hydroxytoluene's antioxidant properties make it an excellent component for use in skincare products. Due to rising disposable income and living standards, the cosmetics and personal care segment's growth is expected to boost the global butylated hydroxytoluene industry.

The expansion of the automotive industry is expected to increase the demand for lubricating oils. However, the product's negative side effects and strict regulations governing its use in the food and beverage industries may stymie market growth during the forecast period.

Key Market Players

The major players in the market are Lanxess AG, Eastman Chemical Company, Sasol Limited, and Impextraco NV, among others. The report covers the market shares, capacities, plant turnarounds, expansions, investments, and mergers and acquisitions, among other latest developments of these market players.
