TABPI President Paul J. Heney said that this year's entries demonstrate how trade, association, and business publications remain a powerful medium for informing the niche business leaders and other professionals they serve. "The Tabbie Awards is closing in on two decades of celebrating b2b journalism. It's been a delight seeing how adaptable and forward-thinking our industry has become," Heney said.

"Worldwide, b2b publications are fast-evolving through the use of multi-platforms such as all-digital magazines and e-newsletters that enhance the way audiences experience the latest trends, technologies, and solutions," Heney added. "The outstanding work by this year's writers, editors, and designers is testament to that."
