The global genome editing market was valued at $4.81 billion in 2020 and is projected to reach $36.06 billion by 2030 registering a CAGR of 22.30% from 2021 to 2030. Gene editing has indicated a good potential for the treatment of genetic disorders, infectious diseases, and cancer. Gene editing is a type of genetic editing where a DNA is inserted, deleted or replaced in the genome of an organism to treat a particular disease using an engineered nuclease or molecular scissor. These nucleases create site-specific double-stranded breaks at desired locations in the genome. The induced double-stranded breaks are repaired through non-homologous end joining or homologous recombination resulting in targeted mutations (edits).
