Some Key Findings from the Report:

Based on the type, the validation segment is expected to register a CAGR of 10.6% over the forecast period due to extensive use of this product form in the pharmaceuticals industry, as these aid in detecting drug therapy failure by recognizing non-responders with distinct genetic profiles and weak therapeutic profiles.

The cardiovascular disease segment is expected to register a CAGR of 10.4% during the forecasted period due to rising focus on discovering cardiac biomarkers to achieve a better understanding of the pathophysiology of these diseases.

Drug discovery and development segment accounted for a significantly large revenue share in the global clinical biomarkers market in 2019. This segment also accounted for majority share of 38.2% among the other application segments in the North America market in 2019.

North America dominated other regional markets in the global clinical biomarkers market with a revenue share of 39.9% in 2019. This can be attributed to rising prevalence of chronic diseases and illness and ambitious policy initiatives along with regional involvement of regulatory authorities, as well as key players in the industry.
