“TrulyHired has experienced sensational success filling positions across our country with quality candidates,” says Founder and CEO of WorkMonger and TrulyHired, John Troy.

“The growth of the platform since its launch has been nothing short of incredible and we look forward to helping both job seekers and employers for years to come.”

TrulyHired continues to promote job posting resources for employers seeking to find true leaders that can make a difference within their schools and communities. The TrulyHired website has made it seamless for employers to post a position quickly and match candidates with the highest qualifications with the right job openings.

The company looks forward to working with more organizations in the broader education sector, including school districts, public charter schools, community colleges, foundations, government agencies, support organizations, and more.

The massive boom of virtual and work-from-home jobs has helped create an entire category of job postings dedicated to remote work on TrulyHired. No matter how and where job seekers want to work, you can find a position that fits those skills.

TrulyHired wants to make career searching as easy and seamless as possible for job seekers to focus on what they do best – helping those who want to better themselves through education and learning.
