The company also has offices in Southlake and McKinney, TX, which has allowed them to service thousands of homes and businesses in the large metroplex. Forterra chose to expand to Denton in order to better access and service its customers in the city, says David Dance, owner of Forterra Pest Control.

"We've grown a lot in the past couple years, particularly in and around Denton," he says. "Having an office space close to that area makes it easier and faster for our pest control technicians to help our customers with their pest problems. When people find insects or rodents in their home, they want them gone right away. This new office allows us to easily reach customers and get pests out of their homes."

Dance and his team are excited about the expansion, and hopeful that the company will be able to keep growing and helping Texas residents live pest-free. Forterra Pest Control is known for its professional pest removal services as well as programs that give back to the local community, such as Dallas Bites Back.
