As the name implies, Relaxation drinks are used to relieve stress and are typically available in liquid form. The drinks are primarily non-alcoholic and contain ingredients such as chamomile, gamma-aminobutyric acid, Melissa officinalis, L-theanine, melatonin, and marijuana, which have been shown to aid in stress relief, a better night's sleep, and an overall mellower vibe.

Opportunity

Other factors that contribute to business growth include increased purchasers' disposable income, changes in flavor and selection, and the incorporation of additional wholesome constituents in the drink by unconventional business professionals. The obvious availability of tea and herbal drink-infused beverages is expected to stimulate the growth market. The growth of the product portfolio and the expansion of retailing and advertising activities are planned to provide promising opportunities for key professionals in the relaxation beverages market.

Restraints

One aspect that is predicted to limit the growth of the relaxation beverage industry is the price point at which they are offered. The majority of the drinks are frequently more expensive than alcoholic beverages such as beer. This is primarily due to the number of constituents present in relaxation beverages, and the price disparity is expected to impede market growth. Nonetheless, the higher cost of green tea in comparison to black tea is expected to limit the growth of the relaxation beverages market.
