The growing fascination with NFTs means there are growing concerns over the legal liability for the activities related to NFTs. It is important for the purchasers and NFT creators to protect themselves from potential legal liability and intellectual property (“IP”) rights. It is crucial also for the NFT marketplace to figure out the legal recourse available for the IP rights holders and to an NFT marketplace for infringing content.

Potential legal liabilities of the NFT marketplaces:

An Individual may commit secondary infringement if they import or export infringed NFTs, buyers or sellers infringing NFTs, make infringing NFTs, and uses infringed NFTs. If NFTs violate copyrighted work, the NFT marketplaces may also incur secondary liabilities. To shield from the potential legal liabilities of the infringing works, they may require legal representation.

Lawsuit for infringement:

The IP owner can sue for infringement of their IP rights, but there remain some difficulties for them to file a lawsuit for infringement.

First difficulty is the means of locating the infringer. Most NFT creators are behind the screen, it is difficult to identify their identity. Therefore, it is not much harder to determine liability.

The second problem is the conflict of law problem. Due to the anonymity of blockchain and the lack of International laws, it is difficult for the local court to determine where a lawsuit would be filed and what the applicable law would be.

NFTs can violate International copyrighted Laws. The NFT marketplace will have legal liability. Everyone should be aware of the legal risks that they are exposing themselves to in the new NFT market.

Conclusion

American Samoa LLCs are available worldwide. LLCs can provide protection against potential NFT Infringement Laws. LLC is a proven way for individuals who unknowingly violate laws in the new and ever-changing NFT market.
