-- A curing light is majorly used for the polymerization of light cured resin-based materials. In the dentistry industry, curing light is an integral part of dental equipment used for the polymerization of composites with light-cure resin. Dental curing lights are an integral part of all dental procedures/specialties. Almost all dental adhesives and resin composites utilize light energy for polymerization that determines the long-term clinical success of a procedure. Dental infectious diseases are generally referred to as tooth decay, dental cavities, or dental caries, which are common oral diseases. These lead to demineralization of the organic substance in the tooth. The incidence of dental caries among both adults and children has been gradually increasing globally. Usually, dentists clean the decayed tooth by using common treatments, such as crowns, root canals, fillings, and extraction. This is expected to boost the market.
