The external fixators are used in surgical procedures to immobilize the bones and to allow the bone fractures to heal. External fixators provide stability to the bones and soft tissues after serious ruptures in the soft tissues or bones. The bone external fixators are used to correct bone misalignment, protect soft tissue after bone injury, and to restore limb length. The external fixators also ensure the ideal compression, extension, or neutralization of bone placement while allowing movement of the nearby joints. They not only aid in setting the bones correctly but also help to minimize muscle atrophy and edema (the buildup of excess fluid) caused by the total immobilization of a limb.
