COVID-19 Impact on Chainsaw Market

Most of the world's primary markets have been impacted by the COVID-19 explosion. COVID-19 has a negative impact on the target market. North America has the largest chainsaw market, but supply and demand have decreased due to the spread of coronavirus and lockout situations in the United States. COVID-19 has hampered the growth of the target industry in developed and developing economies worldwide due to supply chain instability, volatility in raw material supply, insufficient manpower in manufacturing facility, and low demand for end-use customers. COVID-19, on the other hand, is increasingly resolving the situation, and most companies are starting their facilities at full capacity.

Chainsaw Market Dynamics

Drivers

Growing demand for wooden goods which is leading to increase in the rate of deforestation. Rising levels of urbanisation, combined with an increasing rate of deforestation for infrastructure development, are currently driving market growth. Furthermore, rising consumer living standards and a growing emphasis on interior design drive demand for wood-based flooring, panels, roofing, etc. In line with this, rising per capita spending on high-end and premium wooden furniture is increasing the use of chainsaws in furniture manufacturing applications.

Implementation of labour safety regulations and technological advancements in chainsaw technology

Implementing stringent government labour safety regulations to prevent injuries and mishaps has resulted in the emergence of compact and lightweight product variants. Furthermore, the shifting consumer preference away from traditional gasoline-powered chainsaws and toward eco-friendly alternatives such as battery-powered and electric chainsaws will drive the market even further.

Opportunity

Firms in the target industry focus on business growth through strategies such as advanced product launches, capacity expansion, and heavy production investments in their facilities, which are expected to flourish soon as the global chain-saw market grows. This trend is expected to expand the global chainsaw industry over the next ten years. Furthermore, demand for furniture and construction sectors will drive chainsaw growth in the coming years.

Restraints

High raw material prices, as well as increasing restrictions and regulatory bans, will act as market restraints for the growth of chainsaw during the forecast period. Less product awareness will act as a restraint further challenging the growth of the chainsaw market during the forecast period.
