Allegations in the Stitch Fix Class Action Lawsuit

Traditionally, Stitch Fix sold products as a "Fix" box, through which the customer would receive a monthly box of items chosen by a personal stylist. The customer would not know specifically which items they were receiving but would have the option to return whichever items it did not want. But on December 8, 2020, the start of the Class Period, Stitch Fix launched the “Freestyle” program – a new, direct buy program where customers could choose from the outset which items to purchase. Throughout the Class Period, Stitch Fix touted that the two programs were synergistic, and repeatedly denied claims that the Freestyle program could cannibalize its legacy Fix business.

However, on December 7, 2021, Stitch Fix admitted for the first time that it had downplayed the magnitude of its transition from the subscription-based Fix model to the retail-based Freestyle model. Stitch Fix further admitted that it saw some “short-term cannibalization” from new customers who chose to use the new direct-buy Freestyle option rather than the traditional Fix option. In addition, Stitch Fix announced a loss for its first quarter of 2021 and cut its full-year revenue projections. On this news, the price of Stitch Fix stock declined by approximately 24%.

Then, on March 8, 2022, Stitch Fix offered a weak outlook for its third quarter of 2022 and cut its revenue guidance for the full year. In doing so, Stitch Fix revealed a self-inflicted friction between the Freestyle program and the Fix program. On this news, the price of Stitch Fix stock declined by an additional 6%, further damaging investors who suffered losses in Stitch Fix stock.
