Hirsutism is stiff or dark body hair, appearing on the body where women don't commonly have hair — primarily the face, chest, lower abdomen, inner thighs and back. It is a condition in women that results in excessive growth of dark or coarse hair in a male-like pattern. People have widely varying opinions on what's considered excessive. When high androgen levels cause hirsutism, other signs might develop over time, a process called virilization. Self-care methods and effective treatment options are available for women who wish to treat hirsutism.

Top impacting factors: Market Scenario Analysis, Trends, Drivers and Impact Analysis: Facial hair is considered as undesirable for women worldwide, which has increased the cosmetic as well as psychological problems regarding unwanted hair. This is estimated to drive the hirsutism market growth. Global beauty standards in various cultures do not approve of body hair. Hence, it put immense pressure on the patients to comply with normative beauty and aesthetic standards. These aspects are driving the demand of laser hair removal because of its higher efficacy. Rise in treatment awareness, technological advancements and rise in personal care expenditure along with rise in R&D and new product launches are estimated to drive the hirsutism market growth.
