

Monty Python Tabletop Role-Playing Game

Exalted Funeral are proud to announce the forthcoming tabletop role-playing game: Monty Python's Cocurricular Mediaeval Reenactment Programme

MERIDIAN, ID, USA, September 9, 2022 /EINPresswire.com/ -- Today developer Crowbar Creative and publisher Exalted Funeral announced a forthcoming tabletop role-playing game: Monty Python's Cocurricular Mediaeval Reenactment Programme, which is, in fact, not a role-playing game (silly), but rather a very rigorous course of study intended only for serious students of English History.

It is by no means a complete and comprehensive manual for running imaginative, highly unpredictable, Mediaeval-themed role-playing games based upon the complete comedic output of Monty Python with one's friends.

This officially licensed Programme consists of a core book featuring an original rules-lite gaming system; guidance on designing adventures; character creation, bestiary, retinue, and NPC sections; tables for generating all sorts of things; and ready-to-run adventures. There is also a madcap, backgammon-based minigame that involves dice catapults and farm animals, called Fetchez la Vache.

Though the game is set in Mediaeval England, it draws upon Monty Python's complete catalogue of works—Flying Circus, films, albums, stage and live shows—to create an interactive world full of their unique characters, creations, and sensibilities, which can be brought to bear for long-term campaigns or a single evening's entertainment educational advancement.

Players need not be familiar with Monty Python's work in order to participate; nor is role-playing game experience required. (The latter would be entirely useless, as this is emphatically not a role-playing game, and if you do have extensive experience with such things, you are likely too silly a person to participate in this Programme and should stop reading immediately.)

If such middling, obscure franchises as Star Wars and Lord of the Rings get to have RPGs, why not Monty Python?

Monty Python's Cocurricular Medieval Reenactment Programme will be available to pre-order through Kickstarter in October 2022, with SKUs including the Bloody Peasant Edition, the Sensible Middle Class Edition, the Public School Edition, and the Upper Class Twit Bundle, along with early backer specials and add ons including custom dice, a Head of Light Entertainment screen, and a Fetechez la Vache set with dice catapults.
